Saved from the Gallows
It was during a recess in one of the New York courts last week that the lawyers and reporters there assembled engaged in conversation in reference to the approaching execution of Edward Reichardt, the State Island murderer. One of the party present was Col. Charles S. Spencer, who for several minutes sat with his feet resting upon the table, and quietly listened to what the others had to say. The Colonel was gazing intently at the ceiling and it was evident that he had in his mind something appropriate to the topic under discussion. Taking advantage of the lull in the conversation, he broke out with:
"On last Christmas day I was the recipient of a Santa Claus gift from one of the wealthiest and most prominent business men of San Francisco. Well, my friends, if I should stop with this bare and apparently insignificant statement, you would all say that I had no bearing on the subject of murder. But the fact is, my San Francisco friend once killed a fellow mortal."
"What's his name?" inquired several gentlemen in a breath.
"Never mind," exclaimed Col. Spencer. "I do not propose to give his name away. Suppose we call him John Jones. When I was a comparatively young lawyer struggling for fortune, I happened to drop into one of the United States courts, when the Judge, noticing my presence, requested me to defend a youthful sailor who had been arrested for filling a shipmate at sea. It was a pretty tough case, I can tell you. The young prisoner, while on a voyage from Europe to America, was sent aloft in company with another youth, to scrape the mast. Each of the boys was provided with a long-bladed knife to use in the work. The young fellows had a dispute in regard to some trivial matter, and the one I call John Jones, in a moment of passion, drove his knife completely through the body of his associate. The wound did not prove unduly deep when he struck the deck. Jones was put in irons, and when the vessel reached New York he was handed over to the Federal authorities."
"Did you get the prisoner clear?" inquired one of the colonel's auditors.
"Yes, I secured his discharge, after making no end of shift in behalf of the poor fellow. He was as poor as a church mouse, and I did not get a cent for my services. I kept him at my house a few days, and after expressing his gratitude for saving him from the gallows, he bade me good-bye. I did not hear anything of Jones until ten or twelve years had passed away. When I was informed that he had established himself in business in San Francisco and had become a wealthy man. He now writes me that he intends to send me a valuable gift every Christmas as long as he and I are in the land of the living. At some future date I intend to befriend a poor boy."—N. Y. Star.
NIGHTMARE—There seems to be a prevalent opinion among a large number of persons that "nightmare" is produced by "stagnation of the blood." That may, to some extent, be the direct though secondary cause; but my opinion, advanced with some trepidation, is that the primary cause is compression of the spinal cord in the vertebrae of the neck.
It is, I believe, an established fact that persons never have the "nightmare" except when lying on their backs. While in this position, when the pillow is too high, as is generally the case, the head is thrown forward, thus placing the joints constituting the upper portion of the spinal column out of their natural position. This disturbs or impedes the transmission of the nervous fluid or electric currents (whichever you please) through the vaso-motor nerves which control the respiratory and ventricular muscles, and results in a diminished action or partial suspension of the functions performed by those important organs—heart and lungs. A consequent stagnation in the circulation of the blood follows. This is the foundation of the theoretical view—"stagnation of the blood." Now the point on which I wish to be informed is this: Is the "nightmare" caused by "stagnation of the blood," or by nervous derangement which results in temporary or partial suspension of the circulation?
Please, some kind physician, explain this thing to us, and set us right if we are wrong. It is our right, let us know it; for we had just as well be wrong as to be in doubt.

Sleep, Appetite and Strength
Return when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is systematically used by a bilious dyspeptic sufferer. Moreover, since the brain sympathizes closely with the stomach and its associate organs, the liver and the bowels, as their derangement is rectified by the action of the Bitters, mental despondency produced by that derangement disappears.
